on to Mr. Dowd's telephone. She said that a few minutes before Mr. Dowd had told her to give him a wire, she did so and a few minutes later Mr. Dowd told her he had called up the Gibson woman in reference to her past due bill for hog serum, but was unable to get her on the telephone. Mr. Dowd then told Miss Shiffner to call up the Gibson woman, and if she answered the phone, switch him on and he would speak to her. She said that when she got the number a man's voice answered, and Mr. Dowd later told her that it was "Willie", Mrs. Gibson's son.

Operative asked her if she remembered what the conversation was between Mr. Dowd and the man on the other end. She replied that she disconnected and Mr. Dowd talked to him and did not tell her until later what transpired. She stated that Mr. Dowd had the case in hand from the beginning and he would be able to give all the information regarding telephone calls, and also who he conversed with.

Miss Shiffner could not set the date of this particular phone call, but did say it was a short time before the 14th of Sept. 1922. She also said she believed Mr. Dowd was absolutely honest, but of a timid nature and also that if Mr. Anton stated that such telephone conversation took place between Mr. Dowd and the Gibson woman it must be authentic, and that Mr. Dowd would evidently have to tell all about it.

Miss Shiffner told Operative that W.G. Deinzer, a salesman for the New Brunswick office of the Armour & Co. was now in the butcher business and was located on Easton Ave., one block north of Mine St.
